The Network for Aboriginal Mental Health Research (NAMHR) established with funding from the CIHR Institute for Aboriginal Peoples Health brings together students, researchers, community members, and mental health practitioners from across the country to build capacity for culturally-safe and appropriate mental health and addictions research, and to promote knowledge exchange to meet the needs of Indigenous populations and communities.

The annual meeting provides an opportunity to present new research, develop collaborations and identify mentors and collaborators for training and research. More information on NAMHR can be found at our website: www.namhr.ca
